The Duty of Pittsburg

From the Pittsburg Dispatch. The statement that the business men of Pittsburg are organizing in fayor of the enforcement of articles XVI, and XVII, of the state constitution, with reference to the regulation of corporations, indicates that they are setting about the performance of an important public duty. The case is so simple that it is almost an impossibility to understand how any one can estion it. Here are certain provisions of the fundamental laws, framed by the se-lected wisdom of the state and adopted by an overwhelming vote of the people. Yet for overwhelming vote of the people. Yet for over ten years those provisions have been a dead letter, and the railway men have been representing in other parts of the state that the business men of l'ittsburg do not wish to have them enforced.

have them enforced.

Now, while it is hard to see the logic of a claim that if there is one community willing to see the fundamental law disregarded, therefore it need not be upheld, it so happens that this plea is peculiarly misplaced with regard to l'ittsburg. If there is any city in the country which has reason to remarke the injustice of railway violations of member the injustice of railway violations of the law, it is Pittsburg. What it means, is told by the story of the statistics that under ove years of discrimination Pittsburg's output of iron was only one sixth of the entire production of the country; under five years of railway competition it was one-fifth. Pitts-burg can tell what the establishment of a monopoly by the railway power means by looking at the idle and decaying petroleum refineries that line the banks of the Allegheny river, and has had a recent demonstration of it in the swallowing of the petroleum interests lately built up here by the gigantic corpora-tion whose hundreds of millions were given to it by the favor of the railways.

With such an experience as this extended throughout a dozen industries and a fundred minor examples, Pittsburg should be prompt in showing the faisity of the assertion that she does not wish the constitution of the state made effective. It is to be hoped that the business men of our city will take care to have it known in the most unmistakable way that they want the constitution of the state i govern the corporations just as it does ever
